WEDNESDAY MORNING, MAY 11, 1859. No. 3-From Hodge-Podge Papers.

BY TARPLEY STARR. There is, after all, a right good well of common sense, in human nature, though, to speak charitably, it does seem, sometimes, almost too deep for us, and we have to pump hard to get at the contents. Yet, it is there! A deep vein of perception and appreciation old clod, of human form! So we need never be afraid of not having water enough into which to drop our sounding line. Many a man who could not, for his life, point two ideas in as many apropos and concise sentences, has, surprisingly, often the power of judging with wonderful accuracy of that ability in others. There is scarcely a child, Organic Matter. or a servant, who does not intuitively see the difference between a clear, summary, intelligent order, and one of those shilly-shally bungling sort-better called a disorder-and the consecutive opinion they form of the character from these impalpable signs, presents often a curious little speculum of truth.

There are, to be sure, in the world, some unqualified and uncompromising cases, who seem to take foolishness "in the natural way"-who, though they may carry considerable sweep in society, might really be shut up in their fine houses for jail, laced in their fine clothes for straight-jackets, and left to themselves with folly for their keeper. We never expect more than shape and color from a bubble-and these are the bubbles of society. Yet, all underneath, there are depths as well as shallows; depths which may not be fathomed with the cords of vanity and fashion; depths that can hold in their bosom the vast blue heavens, and send back beautiful reflections, though they be broken; depths too into which, through the noisy babbling surface it shows to the world, we gaze with so much pleasure; diving after its golden sands, wondering over its precious pebbles, admiring its heaven-touched images.

Tis a sin, this thinking so lightly of human nature. Say what you will, there is an immense amount of Divinity in it, though in its gross alliances it may sadly verify the old fable of Venus and Vulcan. Sometimes, indeed, this Divinity never seems to come out, but goes groping round the walls of its prison all the days of its mortal life. But it is there, nevertheless, as we see now and then, when disease, distress, or any of truth's stern hand-maids, batter down the bulwarks of nonsense, which idle folly has run up for pastime. Then, many a brain, that we suspected not of such a thing, sends forth its Minerva full grown and armed; and many a heart, which we thought hard and cold, gives out its charity and loving kindness redolent of humanity. Circumstances make us all; and few, even of our wisest ones, have an apportunity, or rather temptation, to play the fool, of which they do not, to a greater or less extent, avail themselves. Foolishness may or may not be an inherent element of man's nature; he certainly has himself and his fellows to thank for its immense preponderance. Society is a sort of competitorship of vanity, whose nonsense is coined and circulated at compound interest. And if a man keeps always to its conventionalities he is drilled and fettered in a parade armor, under which it is not possible his proportions can grow to true size. But his parts are not dead, only hampered; and when he has the independence, now and then, to exercise himself without this coat of mail, we see what he is, and not determined by a selected chemist, or selected what he can do; a vast deal we find in him ted specimens, or even selected cargoes, but an to be proud of; a vast deal which has the average of the importations just as they arrive, and stamp of God on it; a goodness and wisdom down in the depths of his being into which the iron could not enter. Wherever "two or three" are gathered together, there "auld Nickey-ben" seems, by some means or other, to get in the midst and play off his spiteful jokes by putting us up to all sorts of foolish and ridiculous capers.

And 'tis this "two or three," and two or three multiplied many times, which makes that polygenous mass, called society. But the component part is still man-appreciative man! who in the midst of all this frippery and humbug of social compact can see through the gauzes and mazes, and laugh in his sleeve just as you or I, only he wont "tell tales out o'school"-that is all! But rest assured, for such a great big school as it is, there are marvelously few who have on the genuine "dunce cap"-the real "caul" as it were, which they (like good brother Calvin, in another sense,) are born with and cannot put off. There are, we grant, divers sorts of caps here. None of them much, whereof to boast ourselves. Caps (some of them) which may be called regular vanes of vanity—setting every way to catch the puff of praise. And "wishing caps," oh! so many, which only go off in useless, sometimes dangerous explosion on the luckless head that wears them. And "skull caps," the poor beggar's sky-light through which he gets as much of God's sunshine and bright sky as ever come to him in this world. Then "studying cap" into which the child, Wisdom, is born, with the darker brood of "musing melancholy." And "Liberty caps," which fits man's brow better than oppression's jeweled crown. Then "day caps," with their eager sweating thoughts; and "to cap the climax," "night caps," those blessed little angels 'kerchiefs that bind up the brow of tired care. Yet none of these is exactly the "fool's cap" we would be for making it. And if we could only look into the busy brains beneath, at the thought and struggle and plot, we would be startled at our infidel distrust of man's intelligence. He has more sense than we give him credit for; and the idea of not being appreciated, keeping any man from saying or doing the very best thing in the very best way, is one of those ill-grounded fears which every day's experience undermines. What he does, let it be well done! What he says, let it be well said! And if the reflex influence on his own character be not enough to satisfy and encourage, he may rest assured it is not lost. Somebody in the crowd is treasuring up the arrows of his wit and points of his deeds, receiving the benefit, whilst he is also putting the performer at his true value. Not a a bit of it is lost! The real good word or work bears with it the precious spices to emhalm itself. Clarke County, Va.

SOMBRERO GUANO.

N calling the attention of the public to this valuable and recently discovered deposit of this fertilizing article, we will merely state, that like all other phosphatic GUANOS, its most valuable constituent is phosphoric acid, or bone phosphate of lime; and that its mercantile value, as compared with other GUANOS of its kind, may be easily determined by the amount of phosphoric acid or bone phosphate of lime it contains. In order, there-fore, to give the public a thorough knewledge of what SOMBRERO GUANO does contain, we beg to refer to the following list of eminent chemists in tifferent parts of the world, who have analyzed different cargoes, from average samples taken by themselves from the cargoes just as they arrive from the island, without drying or selection of specimens for analyzation. Each analysis will be xhibited, if required, under the original signature of each chemist named: Of phosphoric acid, estimated as equivalent to phosphate of lime, it is found to contain-
